Sarah Bernhardt has a scrapbook in which she collects the signatures of her own sentiments. In this she declares that she does not care for nobility, a statement which may be taken or left, according to taste. Sarah has jotted down her impressions of other actors. Miss Mary Anderson she considers very beautiful and graceful and a good actress, but not great. Elton T. Terry is the artist I like. Oh! she is a great artist, a grand artist—so graceful, so bewitching and Mr. Irving is an artist—more artist, however, than actor." Madame Bernhardt thinks that an actor should retire at the age of fifty. Well, the time is getting on; but we should like to see Sarah again before she retires.

It is undeniable that fashions are changing somewhat for the worse—for the better, the Chinese might say—in these modern times. The sculptor who wishes a symmetrical figure respects the bust and forms that extreme fashion has cast aside, and often prefers to make for that is available to him. The assertion that the human form is growing larger or smaller may be passed over at worthy of little attention. It is in the deformation of the front end that there is reason for solicitude. While it is true that ancient sculpture reveals to us larger feet of both sexes, it is also true that the bodies supposed to them were much more slender than those of the present day. Moderns are more lithely built, and do very well with less superficial areas of pedestal. It is doubtful whether our feet have been much shortened by modern shoes. The toes have reached out, root-like, into the pink of our shoes, but in breadth, at the toes, they have been favorably modified.

The Home Office has just published the Blue Book of the mineral statistics of the United Kingdom for 1891. The total value of the mines and works of the thirty-three different kinds of minerals was £1,200,000,000, of which, in gold numbers, total contributed £74,010,000; stone £39,000,000, and iron £23,000,000. The habitat of the minerals is interesting. Arsenic comes altogether from Cornwall, Devonshire, and Gloucestershire; tin from Northumbria and Worcester; copper, cobalt, and nickel from Lancashire; lead, bismuth, and tin from Bedfordshire and Cambridgeshire; manganese from Cumberland. Numismatists will be interested to learn that the quantity of silver obtainable from lead ore produced from mines in the United Kingdom amounted to 279,792 ounces—value £35,854. The amount of silver bullion and coins imported last year was £15,598, while £13,063,368 was exported.

Henry De Vere Stanhope, whose claim to the Bar had never been decided in his favour, and who will be known as Baron Stanhope, of Barnard's Castle, in a seat of Sir Henry Morgan, Baronet, of Stanhope, in the County of Durham at Elvaston and Oxford, has been called to the bar, and was for some time Chief Charity Commissioner. He married in 1891 Lady Catherine, daughter of the third Marquess of Exeter. Scott speaks of Barnard Castle, which is the principal scene of "Evelyn."

The son is in her summer clover.
He loves the sun, the breezes blow,
And darling's face her face the cloud.
Vante the finches of her abroad.
On barnard's tone and tone's a strain.

The Queen of Sheba was reduced to a ruined position by the siege of 1662, when it was defended for Queen Elizabeth by Sir George Bowers, of Sleaford. The remains extend over a space of more than six acres.

The Electrician says—Electricity seems destined to afford laws of all kinds an opportunity of showing their professional skill at splitting hairs. In America several legal questions have cropped up. Is electricity dutiable? Can it be stolen? In France it was a moot point until a short time ago whether an electrical supply company was a society or a society, and whether it was of little use to investors, who in the latter case would only be liable for the amount of their share. A society commercial, it appears, is one which has for its principal object "the accomplishment of acts of commerce," such as buying raw material and selling it at a profit, manufacturing, and so on. The Royal Mail Steamship Company of St. Etienne, commanded before the Tribunal of Commerce of that town by one of its customers, declined to submit to the jurisdiction of the court on the ground that the supply of electricity from a central station did not constitute a commercial act, "the company only sells and buys, and does not sell and buy, and is not a commercial society." The Tribunal of Commerce, nevertheless, declared itself competent to try the case, and on appeal its decision was upheld; so that, in France, at any rate, electricity, when supplied from a central station, is deemed a manufactured article.
